Foighel, Professor in the University of Copenhagen; Mr. As already indicated, the Court is not called upon itself to delimit the areas of continental shelf appertaining respectively to each Party, and in consequence is not bound to prescribe the methods to be employed for the purposes of such a delimitation.

The validity of this delimitation must therefore be sought in some other source. Since, however, Article 6 of the Geneva Convention provides only for delimitation between "adjacent" States, which Denmark and the Netherlands clearly are not, or between "opposite" States which, despite suggestions to the contrary, the Court thinks they equally are not, the delimitation of the line E-F on Map 3 could not in any case find its validity in Article 6, even if The Delimitation of the Continental Shelf between Denmark provision were opposable to the Federal Republic.
